Although the interest in Buddhism among the middle class will continue to grow, this does not mean that the measure of its influence will decrease. The reason is that the demand for mindfulness, which is a core component of Thai culture, will still exist. In the absence of mindfulness, the Thai society will experience a significant decline in its happiness levels. Therefore, the interest in Buddhism will remain strong in the future.

Another argument is the Thai government's commitment to promoting Buddhism. The government has made Buddhism a national religion, which has helped to increase its influence in society. In addition, the government has invested in education and research to promote Buddhism, which has contributed to its growing popularity.

Finally, the interest in Buddhism among young people is also on the rise. Many young Thais are seeking alternative spiritual paths to deal with the pressures of modern life, and Buddhism offers them a sense of community and a way to connect with their inner selves. Therefore, it is safe to say that the interest in Buddhism in Thailand will continue to grow in the future.